Course Description:
This course will teach fundamental knowledge of minority groups in Japan, specifically the Buraku (Dowa) problem. After explaining the history and the contemporary issues relating to Buraku and other minority groups, it will show how they take some actions against the various types of discriminations in their daily lives. This class will also focus on Dowa Education which is a special educational program on Buraku issues and community development in Buraku communities. It will show how Dowa Education and community development in some Buraku Communities in the Kinki region play significant roles at local and national levels, and what impact this education and community development practice has had on the Buraku community as well as wider society. We will also take a comparative analysis on special education for minority groups in Japan. In addition to lecture and discussion, the class will take in some field trips to places such as Buraku community in Osaka city and Human Right Museum or National Museum of Ethnology so that students can learn this subject actively and practically. The class is held in English; however important cultural and technical terms in Japanese will be introduced as necessary. Student must take a term exam as well as participate in class discussion and a team project presentation.

Resources
Handouts will be provided for each class.
